Dear Friends,

Community foundations are unique, place-based institutions. And here in Fairfield County, we, like many of our peers in the community foundation world, are taking steps to become even more grounded in the communities we serve.

During the past year, we’ve reimagined every aspect of our work. We’ve changed the way we communicate, how we relate to our community, and how we show up. And we’ve developed new approaches to build the capacity of the people and nonprofits that are closest to the issues we’re working to address.

Throughout this process, I’ve been incredibly proud to work closely with our board — and the amazing group of leaders and experts who are approaching this difficult and important work with equal parts humility and courage.

But none of this is possible without you. Because of you and your support, I’m more confident than ever that our community can achieve our collective goal of creating a Fairfield County where every person has an equitable opportunity to thrive.

We are grateful for your support and invite you to continue to partner with us.

In community,

Edwin L. Ford
Board Chair, Fairfield County’s Community Foundation

Edwin L. Ford
Dear Friends,

Last year marked the launch of Fairfield County Forward — our strategy for partnering with the community to create a region where every person has an equitable opportunity to thrive.

When our board and staff decided to change our mission statement, the core expression of our purpose, we felt it necessary to begin that statement with the words “partnering with our community.” These words signal — both to our team and to the community — that we exist to serve and support the people of Fairfield County. This change is more than just a rephrasing; it is a profound evolution in our approach and priorities.

As a community foundation, it’s easy to fall into the habit of thinking about our work through the transactional lens of raising money and making grants. But we have a calling to do much more than that.

Achieving our mission as a community foundation requires full commitment to showing up in the spirit of humility and with deep respect for the tapestry of nonprofits, grassroots organizations, and individuals working every day to make our county a better place to live. It requires us to create more authentic and enduring relationships with these partners and to courageously lend our voice and resources to confront wrong, take strategic risks, and pursue innovative solutions to advance positive change.

Early in my tenure as President and CEO of the Community Foundation, I began using the phrase “In Community” as the closing to my notes and letters as a reminder of this central commitment to working in partnership with and support of the people of Fairfield County.

“In Community” serves as the theme of this report, which invites you into the community to learn about some of the remarkable people and organizations at the heart of moving Fairfield County forward. On the following pages, you’ll meet dedicated doulas who are working to help Black mothers deliver healthy babies, advocates making it possible for public school students to thrive, and nonprofits that are connecting underemployed workers with opportunities to earn a living wage.

These stories — and many more — reinforce our belief that those closest to the challenges in our community hold the key to the solutions. Our role, in turn, is to catalyze their ability to achieve impact by providing resources, bringing people together, and advocating in support.

Our mission cannot be accomplished without all of us contributing our strengths and passions. Whether you’re an advocate for education, a champion of social justice, a supporter of local businesses, or simply someone who cares deeply about the wellbeing of our community, there’s a role for you in shaping our collective future. I hope these stories inspire you to see our region in a new light, and to continue to partner with us in this shared journey.

In community,

Mendi Blue Paca

Tackling the Local Housing Crisis

In 2023, the Community Foundation and partners received national recognition for innovative solutions.

A KEY GOAL FOR THE COMMUNITY FOUNDATION is that everyone building a life in Fairfield County has access to safe, stable, affordable housing. But in a county with the nation’s second-highest rate of income inequality, there is a long way to go to achieve this vision.

Many people in Fairfield County face a constant struggle to attain — and keep — a roof over their heads. We are proud to be part of a group of committed partners that are facing this challenge head-on.

In 2023, our collective efforts received prominent recognition as the Community Foundation became one of 10 organizations nationwide to receive the 2023 Secretary’s Award for Public-Philanthropic Partnerships, an annual award issued by the Council on Foundations. and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

The Community Foundation was recognized for its essential role in creating the Fairfield County Center for Housing Opportunity (FCCHO), a strategic partnership founded in 2018 to address Fairfield County’s housing shortage through a coordinated, regional response.

“We are extremely proud of being nationally recognized for our work, but the ultimate reward we are focused on is creating a thriving community where everyone has an affordable place to live where they can feel safe, secure, and comfortable,” said Mendi Blue Paca, President and CEO of the Community Foundation.

Data collected by FCCHO shows that more than half of Fairfield County households are cost-burdened, meaning that more than 30 percent of all household income is spent on housing. This crisis has disproportionate effects across racial and geographic lines — and, lacking a countywide infrastructure, it is challenging to scale effective housing solutions for Fairfield County’s most underresourced residents.

“We while the facts about the lack of affordable housing in Fairfield County may surprise many people, the data reflects the magnitude of a crisis that has not been addressed fast enough,” said Aicha Woods, Director of FCCHO. “We’re taking steps in the right direction, but increasing affordable housing is a complex problem that deserves the time and attention of all the municipalities in the region.”

The Fairfield County Center for Housing Opportunity is a strategic collaboration between four founding partners — Fairfield County’s Community Foundation, The Housing Collective, Partnership for Strong Communities, and Regional Plan Association — and founding funder JPMorgan Chase. It engages dozens of partners in the production, preservation, and protection of affordable housing to create thriving, equitable communities and a healthy regional economy.

Advocating for Systems Change

We can accomplish much more when we work together.
It’s not easy for foundations to fund advocacy. Knowing that the Community Foundation is supporting this work is tremendously vital.

HAMISH MACPHAIL
Interim Executive Director, ConnCAN

It requires everyone – grassroots organizations, advocacy groups, individual citizens and government – to come together to create a just and equitable community. Because the systems that create inequity are complex, changing them will take collective community investment, advocacy, and innovative thinking.

To achieve this, we’ve launched a comprehensive strategy that helps grassroots organizations build power and resources to advocate for change; empowers individuals to exercise their right to vote and become more engaged in their communities; and increases public will for action by investing in research and programs that shine light on Fairfield County’s challenges and potential solutions.

We’re also strengthening relationships with state and local lawmakers and administrators to help them better understand our region’s issues and explore ideas on how to advance equity.

Through this focus on public policy, we have advocated in the state legislature for several successful bills that can positively affect our community, including:

Implementation of early voting. More eligible voters will have the chance to participate in our elections thanks to a new law that requires 14 days of early voting for general elections, seven days of early voting for most primaries, and four days of early voting for special elections and presidential preference primaries.

Medicaid reimbursement for community health care workers. The Legislature approved an important measure to improve health outcomes that authorizes Medicaid reimbursement for community health workers, who often share lived experience with their clients and work on the front line to get people the care they need.

 Bonds for the Housing Trust Fund and Flexible Housing Program. Our legislative delegation played a key role in setting aside $200 million over the next two years for the Housing Trust Fund and another $200 million for FLEX Housing. These investments will give more Fairfield County residents access to safe, stable, and affordable housing in communities of opportunity.

We are also increasing investment in nonprofits and community partners that have a track record of advocating for policies that promote equity in Fairfield County. This includes organizations like ConnCAN, a statewide advocacy group that has worked to increase funding for public education so all kids can have access to high-quality education and the support to succeed academically.

“It’s not easy for foundations to fund advocacy,” said Hamish MacPhail, Interim Executive Director of ConnCAN. “Knowing that Fairfield County’s Community Foundation is helping support this work is tremendously vital, not only because of the financial support, but because they can connect people with different skill sets around shared goals.”

Key findings from the Fairfield County Community Wellbeing Index 2023 were shared with legislators and advocates at the Connecticut State Capitol this spring.
CYNTHIA HAYES STILL REMEMBERS the moment she knew serving as a doula was a lifelong calling.

After coaching a Black patient through acute birth complications — a woman 2.6 times more likely to die during birth than her white peers — Hayes witnessed her patient transform into a mother who was even healthier than before her pregnancy.

“It was because she felt supported in a way that was significant to her experience,” said Hayes, who has worked as a doula in Connecticut for nearly 20 years. “It warmed my heart to see how someone can be empowered just by having the right information.”

As trained nonmedical professionals, doulas offer educational and emotional support that is often lacking in the health care system. Studies show doulas are especially effective at improving outcomes for Black women, who suffer the highest maternal mortality rates of any population.

“Pregnancy is not a medical condition, which is how it’s often treated in the U.S.,” said Hayes. “To support all birthing women, we need to focus on more human-centered ways to help. This is where doulas come in. We don’t give power — we empower people.”

Today, Hayes is helping expand doula services to at-risk women through the Black Maternal Health Initiative, a new program of the Community Foundation’s Fund for Women & Girls. Launched in fall 2022, this three-year, research-driven initiative aims to reduce racial disparities in maternal health outcomes while expanding career opportunities for Black women.

The initiative convenes health care practitioners, policy experts, community leaders, Black mothers, doulas, and...
Our grantee, Health Equity Solutions (HES), advocates for health equity through antiracist policies statewide. Committed to a vision that every Connecticut resident attains optimal health regardless of race, ethnicity, or socioeconomic status, this nonprofit puts itself in spaces where policies are discussed to inject a health equity perspective.

Recent policy wins include advancing Medicaid reimbursement for community health workers and establishing a state certification process for doulas. HES helped the Black Maternal Health Initiative develop a three-pronged strategy to reduce disparities, increase birthing satisfaction, and address structural racism in the health care system by incorporating doula care.

“I really liked that our strategy felt comprehensive and interconnected because if you want to change a system, you have to think about a lot of multifaceted factors,” said Karen Siegel, former Director of Policy at HES. “I believe these are the right strategies for creating a system that better supports mothers and their families. And that’s huge.”

Creating Opportunity for Youth

Many Fairfield County students face substantial obstacles to preparing for meaningful careers as a result of economic, health, housing, and educational inequities. These conditions have created a significant gap in livable-wage employment in Fairfield County. A staggering 48% of Norwalk’s workforce earns less than the minimum livable salary of $42,000 per year.¹

Black and Latino young adults between the ages of 14 and 24 without a high school or postsecondary degree — known as opportunity youth (OY) — are disproportionately affected. In 2022, approximately 35% of Black and 38% of Latino students in Norwalk did not enroll in college during their first year after high school, compared with an average of 30% at the district level and 28.2% at the state level.²

The Fairfield County Business Collaborative for Education Equity (BCEE), a strategic partnership between the Community Foundation and local businesses, aims to increase education equity across the pre-K through 12+ journey. After evaluating feedback from local nonprofits, the BCEE identified a need for more data and insights on how cross-sector collaboration can create sustainable career pathways for opportunity youth. In response, in 2023 the BCEE initiated a research study titled Building Fairfield County’s Business Collaborative for Education Equity invests in research to support career development pathways.

Tomorrow’s Workforce: Equitable Education and Career Pathways for Opportunity Youth in Fairfield County. The study incorporated insights and data from Norwalk organizations running youth education and workforce development programs, as well as more than 40 interviews with stakeholders across Fairfield County.

The findings were unequivocal: A collaborative approach to expand support services coupled with reduction in hiring biases is necessary to transform Fairfield County’s workforce and create a more prosperous local economy. Nonprofits, employers, educational institutions, and government agencies must pool their resources and expertise to create the conditions for opportunity youth to succeed.

The benefits of such an approach extend beyond young people. Successful implementation could lift nearly 9,600 opportunity youth out of poverty, saving almost $3 billion in taxpayer dollars and nearly $9 billion in social costs over the youths’ lifetimes. It would also enable employers to fill vacant positions and increase economic productivity.

“Opportunity youth in our region, particularly young residents of color, continue to face high levels of unemployment and underemployment,” said Jesse Buccolo, Deputy Director of Norwalk ACTS and a nonprofit contributor to the study. “If we want to close our region’s livable-wage gap and create a more equitable economy, we need to provide pathways to success for those who need it the most.”

Through the study, the BCEE hopes to inspire more cross-sector engagement and collaboration to unlock the potential of students in Fairfield County and beyond. Stakeholders can use this resource to develop data-driven action strategies — such as mentorship programs, wraparound services, and decision-making support for OY during life and career transitions.

Empowering Job Seekers to Succeed

A new fund sponsored by Indeed is helping Stamford nonprofits reduce barriers to employment.

BRINGING ABOUT SYSTEMIC CHANGE requires a deep understanding of barriers to progress. Local organizations working on the front lines are best equipped to grasp these challenges, identify opportunities, and mobilize community-centered solutions.

“Our participants often have limited English language skills, are economically disadvantaged, and experience ongoing racial discrimination — all factors that make securing a job difficult,” said Anka Badurina, Executive Director of Building One Community, a Fund grantee focused on immigrant services. “If we want to support an equitable economy, we must address our workforce’s opportunity gap for those who need it the most.”

As part of its competitive grant process, the Fund engaged a range of local leaders to advise on challenges facing Stamford job seekers — challenges that, according to the nonpartisan Center for Budget and Policy Priorities, disproportionately affect Black and Latino communities.

The Fund sought grantees that increase employment opportunities through programs like workforce training and education; disability services; support in navigating the justice system; and access to essentials like housing and transportation, which greatly affect a job seeker’s prospects.

A total of $250,000 in unrestricted support was channeled to four Stamford nonprofits: Building One Community, The Stamford Partnership, C.O.R.N.E.R.S., and Women’s Mentoring Network.
The Stamford community has been home to Indeed from the beginning. It is important to us to support our community by helping those seeking employment find jobs, which is why we partnered with Fairfield County’s Community Foundation to establish the Job Seekers Support Fund,” said Jonathan Gonzalez, ESG Partnership Manager at Indeed. “We are thrilled about this partnership to help expand access to better opportunities for all.”

The general operating support provided by the Fund is critical to empower nonprofits to better fulfill their missions and advance an equitable economy where we all have the chance to thrive.

“We believe everyone deserves the opportunity to reach their full potential,” said Maya Donald, Co-founder of C.O.R.N.E.R.S., one of the Fund’s grantees. “We’re excited to work with our community partners to make that vision a reality.”

Strengthening Nonprofit Leaders

Leaders of color are often uniquely qualified to help nonprofits thrive and fulfill their missions.
When serving predominantly Black and Latino communities, leaders of color can bring the value of shared lived experiences and local credibility to their roles. But too often, they do not have the same access to professional development tools and resources as their white counterparts.

To close this gap, the Community Foundation launched the Leaders of Color Capacity Building Program, which provides training and networking opportunities to help diverse leaders strengthen the nonprofits that are working to advance equity in our community.

The effort is part of the Community Foundation’s Center for Nonprofit Excellence, which has a history of partnering with equity-focused nonprofits to create peer networks, training programs, and other targeted resources for nonprofit leaders.

“Through these programs, they can expand their self-knowledge, hone skills, and build confidence. Wells Fargo, the program’s lead funder, has played a vital role in supporting the professional development workshops.

“We believe it’s essential to provide the resources, support, and guidance to empower leaders of color to reach their full potential and recognize and leverage the unique skills and experience they can offer,” said Terence Floyd, Vice President and Senior Social Impact Specialist at Wells Fargo. “This initiative also offers valuable networking opportunities to interact with peers facing similar challenges while also celebrating successes.”

Honoring a Champion for Progress

Some people have the rare gift of leaving lasting impressions wherever they go.

MIKE FUNCK, who passed away in April 2023, was a community servant who had enduring influence — and his imprint on Fairfield County will be felt for years to come. As Chair of the Board of Directors at Fairfield County’s Community Foundation and later Emeritus Director for its Professional Advisors Council, Mike was a leader who was passionate about connecting donors to our mission.

“He loved the Foundation and believed in our work,” said Juanita James, who retired as the Community Foundation’s President and CEO in 2022. “He was a wonderful ambassador.”

“Mike possessed many professional skills,” added his friend and fellow Foundation board member, Michael Harris. “But it was his knowledge, understanding and ability to move things forward that made him the best person to do this mission-focused work.”

Mike had a successful career, rising from the trust department of Chemical Bank to become President and CEO of U.S. Trust of Connecticut. But his service, to the country and to others, is his outstanding legacy.

After graduating from Georgetown University in 1965, Mike volunteered to do service projects with Operation Crossroads Africa. He then earned a degree from Fordham Law School and served in the U.S. Army for two years, receiving the Bronze Star while stationed in Vietnam. Returning to civilian life, he served on the boards of the World Affairs Forum, Bruce Museum, Stamford Center for the Arts, and the Network for Teaching Entrepreneurship. He was also a strong supporter of Pacific House, a shelter for people experiencing homelessness in Stamford.

Married for 55 years to his wife, Ellen, the couple raised three daughters and became grandparents to nine grandchildren. And as a member of the Community Foundation’s Future Society — a visionary group that fuels grantmaking in perpetuity through planned gifts like bequests — Mike leaves a legacy of generosity that his grandchildren will continue to see at work in Fairfield County throughout their lives.

“Mike was a gentle and kind person who really believed in the organizations he supported,” said Ellen. “It’s a joy to know his generosity will keep making a difference for generations to come.”
